

Maya's Garden

One spring, Maya decided to grow a garden in her backyard. First, she cleared the sticks and rocks from an area of ground. Next, she planted a bunch of flower seeds and a couple of tomato vines. Then, she watered the seeds. Every day after that, Maya watered her plants again and dug out any weeds growing in her garden.

After many days of tending her garden, Maya's plants grew and blossomed. All summer, she and her family enjoyed looking at her flowers and eating her tomatoes. Her hard work had paid off!

Maya was looking forward to working on her garden the following spring. However, that fall, she and her family moved, so she had to start over with a new garden in their new backyard. One day, late in the summer, Maya was visiting a friend near her old house, and they went to see what had happened to her old garden. Lo and behold, the new owners had taken care of it, and it was full of flowers and tomatoes once again.
